

WHO'S WATCHING THE KIDS?

Originally from South Africa, Julian Krinsky is a former international tennis player and an acclaimed tennis coach who was ranked no. 7 in his home country and played at Wimbledon and the French Open, as well as at the Maccabi Games in Israel both for South Africa and the USA, winning silver and bronze medals. He's become equally well known for the summer camps he's created for kids and teens who come from all over the country to attend sessions devoted to everything from art and architecture to the Wharton Sports Business Academy.

Beyond his wide network of specialty camps, he was inspired by the legacy of his great-great grandfather Rabbi Yehoshua Yitzhak Shapira to create Yesh Shabbat, a summer camp experience for young observant Jews. Yesh Shabbat's first-of-its-kind, pre-college program offers expert instructions in the arts, cooking, business, fashion, college prep, tennis, golf, basketball and dozens of popular subjects taught by professional teachers, coaches and instructors. "When I learned about my lineage and the impact my ancestors made in the Jewish world it made me realize my responsibility to the Jewish people and I started Yesh Shabbat," says Julian. "I just don't think it's fair that if you are a good golfer or tennis player and you wear a yarmulke you can't attend Bollettieri or Leadbetter. I wanted to offer young Jews the same opportunity afforded to other teens in sports and summer programming."

Get on board—Julian Krinsky is the driving force behind super cool summer camp.

To help your kids maximize a sleepaway summer experience no matter what camp they attend, here are Julian's tips:

- Have a proper dialogue with your child. Talk about both your expectations and theirs. Some parents just want their kids to have fun and be happy and safe. Others considerate it a reward for working so hard during the school year and for still others, it's an opportunity to explore interests outside the high school curriculum and hone in on their passion for music, business, fashion, cooking and more.
- Impress to your kids that if something is not to their liking they shouldn't call home first. Instead, they should communicate their needs to the person within arm's length who has the quickest ability to fulfill their request. Encourage your child to work out a solution while you resist (hard as it may be) the urge to get too involved. Now is the time for them to grow more independent.
- Go with the flow. If something doesn't go exactly as you or your teen had planned or expected, help them find the good in the situation. This gives you the opportunity to help them develop survival skills as they prepare for college life so they learn how to deal with a variety of situations.
- Talk about cell phone usage ahead of time and how much you can expect to hear from them.
